SAMARITANS

70 years of listening

Together we can make change that saves lives

Samaritans shines a spotlight on talking this Mental Health Awareness Week

With Mental Health Awareness Week almost upon us, Samaritans is shining a spotlight on talking and the impact it can have on our mental wellbeing. This year it feels especially important to step back and remind ourselves of this powerful tool, as we know that many people will be finding things incredibly hard right now.

The rising cost of living is undoubtedly making things tough for a lot of people and on top of these pressures, people will be experiencing their own individual challenges and worries. It's incredibly easy to feel overwhelmed when faced with mounting pressures like this. While talking might not fix everything or make all your worries disappear, it can make them easier to deal with. At Samaritans, we believe in the power of talking and its ability to help you cope when facing difficult challenges. Talking about a problem or worry can help break it into smaller parts, and help you feel less overwhelmed.

Ian, 57 knows what a difference talking can make. It was during a challenging period in his life when his partner at the time hadn't openly come out to his family and as a result he was feeling extremely low and isolated when he turned to Samaritans for support. Ian said: "To speak to someone who was listening, who was listening for as long as it took meant that I wasn't feeling sorry for myself; I was in a difficult situation and, you know, the phrase 'it's good to talk', the fact is it is and it makes a difference, and it did make a big difference."

It doesn't matter how great or small the problems feel, talking can provide perspective and make the issues feel much more manageable. However, talking only works when the person has felt listened to. We know that many people find it hard to speak openly or ask for help when they are struggling and so it's vital that once someone has built up the courage to share their innermost thoughts, that they are really listened to without judgement.

Sarah, 31 was married to a man when she realised that she was not straight. This discovery about her sexuality led her to experience some dark thoughts which is when she contacted Samaritans for support.

Sarah explained: "It wasn't just that the volunteer listened to me, it was that she heard me. And I hadn't felt heard in a long time. After 27 years of pretending to be someone I wasn't – I was heard for the first time. It was an incredible experience to be heard. The space that she gave me, the platform she gave me – changed my life."

The simple act of offering a listening ear to someone who is feeling unable to cope can be lifesaving. This is something that Samaritans volunteers offer 24/7, 365 days a year to anyone regardless of what they are facing.

Debbie, 60 has been a listening volunteer at Samaritans for 13 years. She knows how hard it can be for people to open up and talk, but has seen first-hand what a difference it can make once someone has shared how they are feeling. Debbie explains, "Once you start to talk about what you are facing, you will feel so much better. Don't ever be afraid of opening up about how you feel. Being able to talk about it and coming to your own conclusion on what you need to do, is one the bravest things you can do today."

While it's really important that we have these powerful conversations during Mental Health Awareness Week, we must continue talking about mental health and checking in on those we care about all year round.

Samaritans volunteers are always here, ready to listen and stand beside you, whoever you are, whatever you are facing.

We believe that theatre needs to prove points, encourage change, and show realities on stage that our audiences would often shy away from. Dramas on tv and film of course portray it, but audiences can distract themselves from the truth by getting their phones out. Theatre provides two, or three, hours of inescapable truth, where you can't hide behind a cushion if you feel uncomfortable. If an audience feels comfortable whilst watching one of our shows, then we haven't done our job. The writing is honest. The staging is truthful, and all our dramas highlight either injustice or evoke the need for change.

Like all great stories, Lucinda & Samuel met while working on Shaftesbury Avenue, when Supervisor Lucinda had to teach new Usher Samuel how to sell a £5 programme back in 2021. They first worked together when Samuel offered to help Lucinda at the workshop of her play "Our Last First". Samuel later continued as an outside assistant to Lucinda when the play went into full production at Union Theatre later that year.

Following Lucinda's 5-star reviewed sold-out run, they realised that maybe they had the ability to share more than just a bottle of wine. With shared morals, goals, and a Ying and Yang friendship, it wasn't until a night out at GAY Late on the dance floor that they decided to go for it. And Bullet Point Theatre was born.

Watch as we follow A & B through the firsts and lasts of their relationship, with Sibling & Friend affecting their journey.

'Our Last First' is a play written without any pronouns, genders, ages, physical descriptions, and is cast live, promoting diversity and equality in love stories & theatre casting. We believe the show is aimed at creatives and audiences who see the importance of promoting change in theatre portrayal and casting for minority communities, such as the LGBTQIA+, Global Majority, those with health conditions and impairments, whose love stories are unrepresented. The show proves that diverse casting is possible, that actors can play roles regardless of who they physically are, and educates/ informs audiences about different communities they may not choose to watch, and their realities. Oh and every night is cast live! Meaning our four actors must learn all four roles and the audiences (and the actors) won't know who is playing who until they walk onto the stage and the casting process begins. Meaning one night you'll see a show that focuses on love across different cultural backgrounds and the next on Queer love. Our Last First premiered at The Union Southwark in November 2021 to a sold out run & 5-star reviews, and now is returning for a bigger and bolder production.

It is returning this summer to The Space, Canary Wharf, from 6th-14th June.

Tickets can be purchased here :Our Last First - The Space

The show is also be live streamed so you can watch it from your own sofa :Our Last First - Livestream - The Space

DEMONS

Demons was written as part of my own mental health recovery. I wanted to reach out and speak to others, help navigate them out of addiction, most notably the chem and chem sex scene now huge across the world in the LGBTQIA community.

I reference popular slang terms such as 'Tina' the slang gay word for Crystal Meth and 'Gina' for GHB. Both used for prolonged heightened sex.

I wasn't out to patronise, a lot of gay men in the modern world need to let off steam, or they just have terrible problems opening up or being relaxed and confident. Chems a way of enjoying long connections. I certainly did!

Sadly too often, what starts off as an amazing night, of heightened prolonged sexual arousal, experiences, and deep connections, develops into chronic addiction, whereby the user cannot engage socially or in sexual acts without them!

What starts off as occasional use, soon becomes every weekend, nights roll into days, to three day binges or longer. Sometimes meth users can be up all week!

This causes unreliability at work or study, calling off sick. Soon, only wishing to hang out with fellow users, falling into it's clutches.

Creeping into all areas of life, a spiral can cause relationship breakdowns and them to either lose their job or end up quitting!

The choruses in Demons are about finding the strength to face the day without masking using them or even alcohol.

We all have our demons, we have battles we've fought or continue to fight! Taking chems to give you a clear mind, high and confidence only makes the come down much harder! Usually your bank account is skint right after (you'll take it all out, living in the moment, high, chasing not having to feel those emotions back)

GCCG

The group for LGBTQ+ Classic Car Enthusiasts

The GCCG presented a wide variety of cars on their stand at the Restoration Show. We had a colourful array of cars on our stand, including rose taupe Vanden Plas Princess 1300 (known as Princess Pru) a stunning blue Rover P5B Coupe, and a brace of humble Italians including a red Alfa 166 and a Fiat Cinquetento. One of our special guests was Gwen, a Rover 200 in a base 1.1 spec, which is a real scrap yard survivor. A wide array of mechanical work took place, replacing and adjusting brakes, wheel bearings, and quite a few electrical woes fixed.

The Alfa 166 had an ICS unit repair; the Rover received a new coil, the antitheft device was removed, and a glowing alternator was sorted. More cosmetic repairs included the Cinquetento gaining a new seat panel fabric and the Rover 200 roof panel was replaced. Many of the cars on the stand also received deep cleaning and detailing, The NEC Classic Car and Restoration Show proving again it is a great interactive show to kick off the season.

About the GCCG

The Gay Classic Car Group's (GCCG's) 1,300 LGBT+ members are as diverse as their cars. The GCCG hosts regular national and international meetings. Members receive a quarterly magazine and monthly email bulletins. # GARDENING WITH GOODFELLOW May 2023

Click on any photo to be taken to the very friendly Facebook group : Gay Gardener UK, Plants, Seeds and Surplus Exchange Group.

"FWP does not own or run this group or control it's content".

May Gardening

The season is in full swing now and I don't just mean the party season! Plants are growing quickly, seedlings are popping their heads above the soil and need pricking out, (seriously that's what they call it, honest).

So, you've sown your veg and flower seeds in seed trays and they now need transplanting – when should you do that? - when large enough to handle and handle only by the leaves, not the stem or roots as you will cause damage. Don't leave them in the trays for too long else they will be difficult to transplant or get long and thin in the trays.

The young plants on the far left have been pricked out into a variety of pots – just to show you can use a variety of containers – there are peat pots where you plant the whole thing including the pot and different shaped plastic ones both thin single use and strong re-usable. The young plants on the left have been left a bit long but are still OK to put into single pots.

There is still a chance of some late frost so be careful with your young plants. Either keep them in a cool greenhouse or transfer them to a cold frame prior to planting in the ground. They will need a couple of weeks in cold frames to harden them off (no not kidding!) after they have come out of the greenhouse. This stops them getting too much of a shock prior to planting in their final position in the garden.

Far left is a young tomato plant already growing small side shoots that should be removed as soon as they are big enough to pinch out gently with your fingers. If you don't the plant will become bushy with lots of leaves but few flowers and fruit. The photo on the left is an Arum Lily corm starting to shoot and now ready to put in a pot. Keep in at least a cold frame until the fear of frost has passed as they aren't hardy.

You can carry on using potato sacks both inside the greenhouse and outside if you want to be flexible enough to move your crops around or you have more hard-standing than garden soil. You can re-use the compost in them but remember just like in the border, don't use for the same crops multiple times else pests and disease will build up.

If you have a lawn, you can use weed and feed this month to get rid of broad-leaved weeds like dandelion but also to give a boost to your grass which will make it go a lush green.

If you prefer not to use chemicals but don't want to see your hard work eaten before your very eyes, there are a few things you can do. For slugs you can buy nematodes that are a biological treatment for the garden soil. There is also the copper tape that can be fixed to the outside of containers, making an effective barrier to slugs and snails.

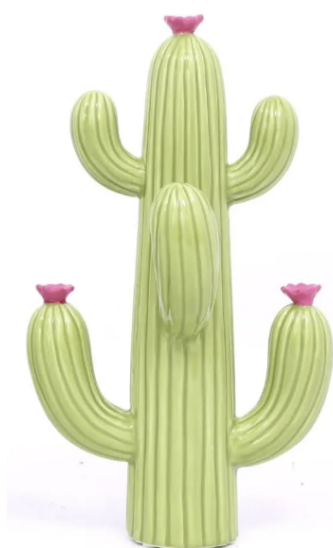

For the greenhouse and the border, there is French Marigold – interspersed with your flowers and vegetables, these plants look good but also keep off aphids which can be devastating to plants. Be careful lifting those bags of compost, they are heavy and slippery!

The seedlings at the top are sweet corn in paper containers so the whole thing can be planted when ready – they have deep roots so I've used grow tubes. They can be grown outside or you can leave them in the greenhouse in larger containers – you will get an earlier crop of corn cobs and there is less chance of them getting damaged from wind etc. The ones at the bottom are lettuce and will provide some early salad leaves if kept in the greenhouse and transplanted into pots or the greenhouse soil. The ones heading for the cold frame and a garden border will provide continuity after the greenhouse ones have come to an end.

Vardy V Rooney: The Wagatha Christie Trial

In one corner we have Rebecca Vardy, who has been accused by the woman in the opposite corner - Coleen Rooney - of leaking personal information about her to the press, so Vardy sues Rooney for defamation, all of this cleverly put together in the play 'Vardy V Rooney: The Wagatha Christie Trial'.

We all remember the tribulations, the gossip, and the salacious details that were revealed in the case which was called by the press as the trial of the century.

Vardy (Lucy May Barker) and Rooney (Laura Dos Santos) slugged it out in court and we all know that Vardy was not able to prove her case (last year), that Rooney libelled her by blaming her for the leaks from her private Instagram account. Rooney was the victor, according to the judge (the actual ruling, by Judge Mrs Justice Steyn, saw Vardy's claims as inconsistent and unfounded. There were large parts of evidence that simply did not hold up in court, or were deemed too far-fetched or 'implausible'.')

In the show, which plays out like a football match as a battle between two very famous WAGS (Wives and Girlfriends), two pundits (Halema Hussain and Nathan McMullen) give us the play by play - commentary on what is happening, what has happened, and what is about to happen - it adds quite a clever and fun twist to the trial and not allowing the show to succumb to just another play about a trial (this is definitely not 'Witness for the Prosecution!')

Writer (adaptor) Liv Hennessy has taken bit parts of the actual trial testimony and turned this into the crux of what this show is all about, the amazing, exciting and unbelievable testimony that these two women gave to the judge on the witness stand. Some of it is hard to believe (a lost phone, deletion of all messages, and Davy Jones), while one of the women keeps digging herself into a large whole, with her credibility sinking fast. But taken as satire, this show gives you food for thought on social media, celebrity and privacy, and when you combine all three, you get a situation like this. It's the modern age of social media, and as we now know, anything is possible.

LGBTQ+ Turn the beauty of your being inside out!

Age UK exists to help older people when they need us the most. The Charity provides services and support at a national and local level, through its network of local Age UKs, to inspire, enable and support older people. Age UK's national services include its Telephone Friendship Service, which helps to tackle loneliness by matching an older person with a volunteer for a weekly chat, and its Advice Line, which provides vital information and advice to older people and their families on a range of issues. The Age UK network comprises of around 125 local Age UKs across the country who run a variety of inclusive and diverse services and groups, such as friendship services, LGBT+ groups, exercise groups, cooking classes and coffee mornings.

The Charity provides free information and advice to help with topics as diverse as claiming benefits to care homes, as well as subjects such as transitioning in later life and understanding your rights and how to ensure they're respected.

Laws and social attitudes affecting LGBTQ+ people have changed, mainly in a positive way, over the course of older people's lifetimes, but many older LGBTQ+ people have lived most of their lives in times in which same sex relationships and being trans were highly stigmatised. This might have led to feeling being unable to be open about sexual orientation or gender identity, feelings which persist for some. Or being rejected by family earlier in their lives could contribute to feelings of loneliness.

Loneliness is a huge issue affecting older people and has been linked to poorer health, depression, sleep problems, stress and other mental health problems. Sadly, nearly a million older people across the UK often feel lonely with issues such as bereavement, ill health and complex long term health conditions making it harder for older people to stay connected.

It's easy to get into the habit of staying at home and spending a lot of time by yourself – but getting out and about is one of the best things people can do to stay happy and healthy.

Enjoying hobbies and getting involved in the local community can improve self-confidence and is great for keeping active. There are lots of social groups for older people – including plenty that are specifically for older LGBTQ+ people – as well as activity-based groups for LGBTQ+ people of all ages.

There is also evidence to suggest that there are health inequalities experienced by older LGBTQ+ people. Age UK believes that action is needed to reduce these inequalities, that services should be sensitive to needs and that people should be able to feel confident and comfortable in accessing them.

Healthcare services have a duty to provide care that is fair and equal. LGBTQ+ people face the same general health concerns as everyone else, though some issues disproportionately or specifically affect LGBTQ+ people. It's important to see a doctor if you're concerned about your health. Every doctor's surgery should have a policy on equality and diversity, which you can ask to see at any time. Any information you share with NHS staff is confidential and there are strict laws to ensure health records are kept secure. If you have faced discrimination or poor treatment in the past, it's understandable to worry it could happen again. A bad experience may put you off going back to your doctor, even if you're concerned something might be wrong. But avoiding it could put your health at risk.

Age UK's information and advice for LGBTQ+ older people can be found on the Charity's website at www.ageuk.org.uk/lgbt or by calling the Age UK Advice Line on 0800 169 65 65.
